MARYLAND HOTELIERS SHARING THEIR HARDSHIP

Andrew Labetti – Millersville, MD
"I have experienced firsthand...the enormous amount of cancellations that have drastically cut the hours of most of our associates."

Giovanna Cavagnaro – Chevy Chase, MD
“As a hotelier in Maryland I have experienced firsthand the drastic changes that the virus has caused to our hotels operations and therefore financials, putting those who are hard at work in the industry at risk of not being able to take care of themselves."

Nicole Conrad – Lutherville-Timonium, MD
“I have experienced firsthand the loss of revenue which effects all employees. Employees are being laid off or let go. These are hourly employees who need this money to take care of their families."

Kimberly Phillips – Towson, MD
“We had to lay off almost every hourly employee at our hotel yesterday. I have had every event and room block cancel for March and April. We are estimated to lose approximately $150,000-$200,000 in group room blocks and catering business over the next two months (and we are a small property). If this continues, the loss will be catastrophic. This estimate is also not including the leisure and corporate business travelers who are cancelling their individual reservations."

Shawn Gravelle – Manchester, MD
“I have experienced firsthand that we have had to lay off 3 of our 5 breakfast hostesses, 8 Housekeepers, 3 newly hired front desk employees, and 1 maintenance engineer. And this is our start of layoffs based on news announcements through 3/16/20. As a hotel industry, this is happening in every hotel and some hotel owners are even closing their hotels which will negatively impact so many people. Scary times."

The travel industry has taken a beating from the coronavirus. Its trade association has told the Trump administration it will need a $150 billion bailout to recover. And hotel industry executives have told the president and Vice President Pence this week of a “catastrophic toll” on its workforce — and its balance sheets. One major U.S.-based lodging chain has laid off tens of thousands of workers. Locally some lodging properties, especially in the eastern panhandle, are hanging in for the time being with so many out-of-state workers relocating to the region. But for the tourist trade, this is the worst it has ever been.

“Travel industry executives visited the White House on Tuesday with a dire warning on the fallout from the coronavirus pandemic: half of all hotels in the United States could close by year’s end and put 4 million Americans out of work without a massive bailout from Washington.”
